THE EASTERN QUESTION.

PARIS, MAY 28.

The Journal des Debats has received from London a full summary of Prince Gortschakoff's memo. It sets out by a preamble reciting that the Sultan has contracted an engagement towards Europe, by the acceptance of the Andranote Note; that the Powers have a moral right and a duty to have that engagement carried out, and that on its fulfilment depends the maintenance of peace. It nevertheless states with regret that up to the present time the Sultan has done nothing to carry out his promises; that the result has been to give encouragement to Muslim fanaticism; and further that the fatal affair at Salonica must be regarded unfortunately as to be the hesitation of the Turkish Government to fulfil obligations solemnly subscribed. The memo then sets forth the points on which the three Powers have come to an agreement. The first is the conclusion of a two months' armistice, during which the two parties may, it is hoped, come to an understanding on the basis of the five points of the Andranote Note, and the following additional points, proposed by the insurgent chiefs—namely, first, that the Porte should undertake the reconstruction of the Christian houses and churches destroyed by the Turks, and that it should supply the owners with food for one year, and exempt them from taxation for three years, dating from the day of their return; second, that this relief should be distributed by the commission of notables mentioned in the Andranote Note—a commission presided over by a Herizoginian Christian and composed of persons faithfully representing the two religions—Greek and Catholic; third, that the Turkish troops should be removed until the complete pacification of the public mind from all but six fortified towns; fourth, that the Herizoginian Christians should not lay down their arms until the Moslems have laid down theirs, and until the reforms have been faithfully carried out; fifth, that the consuls or delegates of the Powers should superintend the carrying out of the reforms in general, and especially the return of the emigrants to their homes. The memorandum concludes virtually thus—If, however, the armistice should expire without the efforts of the Powers having succeeded in achieving their aim, the three Imperial Courts are of opinion that it would be necessary to add to their diplomatic action the sanction of an understanding with a view to such effectual measures as might appear to be requisite, in the interests of the general peace, to check the evil and to prevent its spreading.

PARIS, FRIDAY NIGHT, MAY 26.

The general public view the present crisis in the East with great apprehension; but in political quarters it is believed the storm will blow over.

It is considered certain that, in the event of the ultimatum threatened by the Russian note being carried into effect, France will hold aloof from any intervention that is not strictly diplomatic in connection with the Eastern difficulty.

It is rumored in Paris that there is a probability of the Duke Decazes resigning his post at the Foreign Office and being appointed to the French Embassy at St. Petersburg.

"progress" since made has been wonderful no doubt.

"But what good come of it at last, little Willie?"

It is a race to avoid great imagined loss, with no possibility of gain. Deliberate, rapid, and the people have to pay! I should be glad to believe that Italy will be the better for the monster gun of the Duilio—but I cannot.

Her Majesty's Canadianistan has been duly proclaimed under the faintest symptom of public satisfaction. Indeed any candid person who reads the terms of the proclamation must at once see that the fear of disguised terrorism which lately shook the world, so many place-bug members were purely visionary. Nor can I doubt that Mr. Lowe's indiscretion (to use no stronger term) in his letter, did much to discredit the whole matter, and to ally whatever uneasiness had been excited by their plausible exaggerations, and the Premier's perplexing advocacy. The outbreak of quarrelsome resentment for the loss of office damaged the speaker; but when the ex-Minister so far forgot himself as to declare that the measure he had denounced was brought forward by her Majesty's special desire, after being declined by two successive Ministers, there was an immediate reaction in its favour. If the declaration was false, his opposition was dishonest; if true, it was unparliamentary, nor were the public inclined to believe that the Queen had set her heart on a scheme fraught with such mischiefs.

May 6.—Mr. Lowe was called to account on the 3rd for having stated, at Bedford, that two successive Ministers had been in vain requested by the Queen to bring forward the measure which the present "Ministerial" Government had carried. He pointed out the whole affair—talked of interference with freedom of after-dinner talk—or of inquisitorial proceedings—said that it mattered not to the House whether he said so or not, and that he was a clever and plucky speaker enough, but could not claim a conscientious property. The characters of great Ministers are public property, and the Queen when the ex-Minister's speech was published, and the Ministerial Government was in a state of official commotion; it is no credit that Mr. Lowe's statement was false in its respects. And to Mr. Gladstone's honour, he is to be credited with the courage to have said so.

May 12.—The close of this month of three weeks was not so out of the little that remains unachieved. The Ministerial Government has passed through a committee, and is in a fair way to become law. The measure is the work of the whole House working on no party lines, but through the conflict and collision of many opinions. The object is to secure a system, which may be called a "collective wisdom." The Government cannot claim credit for its legislation, but it certainly deserves credit for its patience and temper with which they have carried it through committee, weighing every objection and submitting every clause to a thorough discussion. And it should be remembered that the system is a new one, and that the system, they gave up much power and patronage to avoid vexatious interference with commerce.

There are three unpleasant "difficulties" on foot as to the rights of which even the omniscience of "Our Father" would be insufficient to solve. First, there is the Barbadian difficulty, to which I alluded last month. Mr. Pope Hennessy has been well abused as the cause of it; but really very little is known of the matter of the moment beyond the fact that some of the Barbadian planters were to do some special good. Perhaps they thought it was something to set. As for their readiness for a row, that is nothing new. "Badian only resents."

Difficulty number two is with the King of Dahomey! It is clear that his Majesty has been called to account for an outrage on a British merchant ship. Why should the King of Dahomey have had his hand in so many such things? But whether the sable potentate has snapped his fingers at the fine, the Commodore, and the British Lion, or has merely shuffled and temporised in hopes of getting better terms, is a matter which will be decided in due time. There is no doubt that the King of Dahomey is not yet clear, though much may depend on the transaction.

Lastly, there is the graver difficulty arising from the murder of George Gordon, at Salonica. This does not touch England directly, but as an outbreak of Muslim fanaticism may increase the difficulties of the Turkish question. But here again the facts are still in some obscurity. The first of the difficulties has been on the part of the Christians who attacked a Turkish procession to carry off a Greek girl, and to the American Consul (himself a Greek) got somehow mixed up with the matter. It is not clear whether the lawless or unlawful custody seen a very doubtful) brought a Muslim mob about his ears. Then his brother consuls came to his aid, though how they were able to do so is a matter which is not clear. However, the Porte has volunteered all possible apology and reparation, and unless France in her new phase proves as difficult to deal with as another great power, the matter will be settled in due time. A peaceful pass of peace as between the Sultan and the Powers that be. Still, the occurrence strongly marks the difficulty of keeping the peace between Turk and Christian.

I leave the papers to describe the Prince of Wales' return. There is little to add in the way of miscellaneous news. The Archbishop of York has been preaching a rare and temperate sermon on Sunday, and has been well received. There has been a 24-hours' working match at the Agricultural Hall, in which the nation has been beaten by three to one. The Victoria Cup has been won by the Victoria Cup team, and the Victoria Cup has been won by the Victoria Cup team.

land, or in that non-descript region, Northern South Australia. For light work on enormous profit of a moderate capital, it seems to stand almost alone. It would be a pleasant thing to see ostrich feathers made more abundant, if only to check the wholesale massacre of beautiful and harmless birds for the sake of decoration or disfigurement—of what ladies are pleased to call their bonnets. In these days of showy costume, when the maid bedizens herself like her mistress, only rather more so, and not to attract notice, is the ostrich feather a necessary appendage. The line feathers make fine birds seem to threaten the extinction of those birds that have their fine feathers. Solomon's troopers, when cured by his grating, were not so much cured as they were made to see that the ostrich feather was a necessary appendage. At present time, they are nearly valueless, from the fact of lambs, hawks, and other birds being so much taken for the sake of the ostrich feather. The ostrich feather is a necessary appendage.
